YOU DO? SO DO WE!

Do you ever wish for someone to watch over you when you don't want to be alone? Or a friend who will encourage you to live your life with abandon? Or maybe someone who can relieve all your pain so you don't need a prescription?

This sounds like one of those annoying antidepressant ads on TV where they're all, "Do you sometimes feel sad? Do you have days when you feel like you just can't get about of bed?" And you're all yelling back at the telly saying, "Yes! Yes! That's me!" only to realize they're basically marketing the human condition (FYI we know that depression is serious — it's just the over-generalized ads that suck).

But you really should meet the String Doll Gang, a collection of mini-creatures by North Carolina-based company Kamibashi. Each little guy is handmade by artisans in Thailand and imbued with a special power, and more importantly, make the most adorable bag charms.

While the gang does indeed include members who possess the abilities above, not all of their strengths are so serious. There's Old Sid, who sports a Mohawk and protects you from people who have bad taste in music, and Some French Guy is a tiny dude with a pencil moustache who is there to remind you that good food and wine feed the body and soul. If you're going purely on aesthetics, the Heart Throbber is so very right now with his stripes, and it doesn't hurt that he's supposed to steal the heart of the person you secretly admire. Or that he looks quite fetching tacked on to a classic Chanel.
